From discovery to a paid, credited use.

BLTZ connects approved imagery to an athlete's permanent career identity, helping fans and producers discover a specific use and request the right license.

01
Connect
Retain Getty asset ID, source and creator credit; connect the image to the athlete and career moment.

02
Specify
Identify buyer, intended use, channel, territory and term. Locker display permission is separate from downstream use.

03
Approve + license
Getty quotes the use; required rights and approvals are confirmed before publication, resale or production use.

04
Attribute + measure
Record license, use location, credit, referral and payment reference. Pay participants only under agreed contracts.

ONE IMAGE / THREE POSSIBLE BRIEFS

A / Print on demand

A career-defining photograph offered as a physical print from the player's Locker.

Potential buyer
Fan, through a Getty-approved print partner

License brief + approval
Approve Locker display and print resale separately; confirm third-party rights, seller, pricing and fulfillment.

Getty revenue
Getty receives the agreed license fee or sales-based payment. Player participation and fulfillment costs require separate agreed terms.

Attribution + tracking
Asset ID → Locker referral → print order → Getty payment; creator credit and any contracted player payout.

B / Player podcast

A player and former teammate discuss a career moment with its licensed still shown on screen.

Potential buyer
Player's media business or podcast producer

License brief + approval
Specify episode, channels, audience, territory and term; quote promotional clips or social use separately if needed.

Getty revenue
Getty receives a license fee quoted for the episode and approved channels. Podcast income is separate from image licensing.

Attribution + tracking
Asset ID → episode license → published URL + credit → episode views and Getty license revenue.

C / Player documentary

A production team discovers an athlete's history through the Locker and requests a still for a documentary scene.

Potential buyer
Production company or archival producer

License brief + approval
Submit production title, scene/use, distribution, territory and term; agree clearance and credit requirements.

Getty revenue
Getty receives a license fee based on the production's intended use. Additional uses may require additional licensing.

Attribution + tracking
Asset ID → production inquiry → license → scene + credit record → Getty license revenue.

What the pilot asks of each side

Getty: define eligible imagery, quote each use, approve rights/credit requirements and provide a licensing contact.

BLTZ: recruit players, gather use briefs, link imagery to career moments, route requests and report attributable activity.

Discussion proposal, not an existing Getty agreement. Each use needs appropriate approval and a use-specific quote. Views are engagement, not license revenue. Creator attribution does not itself create payment entitlement; royalties, referral fees and player shares apply only if contracted.
